The fuel injected version of the 283 in 1957 that was used in the Corvette produced an amazing 1 horsepower per cubic inch which was almost unheard of at the time coming from a factory built engine. The 283 was an improved design over the Chevy 265 in that the bottom end crankshaft and pistons were much more reliable because of the increased flow of oil supply that was engineered into the motor. Another great feature of this engine was that the crankshaft and camshaft were very close to each ...
